with bibtex installed and gedit preferences saying the editor is Kate, but after updating to the latest version I can't get Gedit to start up anymore. I tried purging gedit (on Suse 12.2) and installing it again, but Gedit starts up and looks like this (I've cropped to the first line): I don't see an option to make it start up in a different way, or what appears to be an option to start it as kate. I don't know whether it's relevant, but Suse 12.2 is based on openSUSE Leap 42.1, which uses KDE 4.11. Any suggestions on how to get it to start up would be much appreciated! A: Try: `sudo apt-get install --reinstall gedit` The problem may be caused by a corrupted `/var/lib/dpkg/status` file. If you are using synaptic package manager as your package manager, please try to open Synaptic package manager and select the option: Edit -> Fix Broken Packages Then reinstall gedit. It should fix the problem. So now I've got this hole in my side, and I hate this hole, I hate the way I look and I hate that I have to admit that I look like a fatty for going out at all. If I try to be with the guys I get boring. I can't just say "OK, I'm done, I want to eat at home" because I'm afraid of them putting on, I mean I'm not skinny, I'm not beautiful, I'm not whatever, but I'm not fat either. So now I'm the kind of person that doesn't go out, and that's sad. I've had this problem since I was a kid, and I was just like that. I could go out all the time and not worry about what people thought about me, and I can't do that anymore because my own feelings have changed. I like doing stuff with the guys, it's fun, but now I don't go out anymore because I'm in the middle of all this and I don't want to be seen like that. I feel like I'm too old 82157476af
